

Vehicle parts made of plastic with integrated antenna elements and method for their productionAbstract

The invention relates to a method for the integration of antenna elements in plastic components of vehicles, the antenna elements being introduced between the coating layer and the plastic substrate as part of a coating method, in particular a film coating method, and also relates to the components produced by this method and to the vehicles equipped with these components.

Figure 2